Since 2015, the Jordan Valley Excavation Project (JVEP) has been investigating the ancient history and archaeology of the southern Jordan Valley region, with a particular focus on the Iron Age (1200-586 BC), sometimes referred to as the "Israelite" period." Recently, the JVEP team explored the site of Khirbet 'Auja el-Foga (pictured on the front), a well-preserved, fortified city on a high hill isolated by steep slopes; pottery collected during initial survey work suggests that its primary period of use was in the Iron Age. The Manasseh-Ephraim boundary description in Josh 16:6-7 names a series of sites between Shechem and Jericho, and it may be that 'Auja el-Foga was one of them. JVEP hypothesizes that it may have served as a central administrative site in the Jericho region in the Iron Age II (1000-586 BC), and this pioneering excavation may yield important time-permitting, take a swim in the Dead Sea. information about the administration of Judah in this region during this period of the Israelite kingdoms.
